

Private ADHD &/or ASD screening assessment and diagnosis

Every individual ADHD/ASD (Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder and Autistic Spectrum Disorder) person is unique and experiences the world in their own way. As with many other aspects of human neurodiversity, such as autism, ADHD and ASD have long been framed largely in negative terms. ADHD and ASD individuals may be to a greater or lesser extent, and with significant individual variability forgetful, absent-minded, easily distracted and easily bored.

Yet by focusing only on negatives as compared with neuro-typical individuals. It is very easy for those not working with or educated in the complexities of neuro divergence to only focus on the negative aspects of neuro-diversity and not see the positive aspects, such as out of the box thinking, an ability to think abstractly to name just one or two.

ADHD Norfolk and Different Minds UK are independent entities working in partnership with each other to provide the highest level of care and support to neuro-diverse individuals. All ADHD-ASD Norfolk's services are delivered by its partnering organisation Different Minds East Anglia LLP. The clinical team is multi-disciplined consisting of a Psychiatrist, Psychologists, Psychotherapists and ADHD coaches/psycho-educators and counsellors.

16. NICE NG87 refers to the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence guidelines on Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) in children, young people, and adults. These guidelines, last updated in September 2018, provide recommendations on the identification, assessment, and treatment of ADHD. Specifically, NG87 emphasises the importance of considering ADHD behaviours across two domains.

In the home setting, NICE recommends that healthcare professionals assess ADHD behaviours within the family environment. This includes understanding how symptoms manifest in day-to-day activities, interactions with family members, and the overall impact on familial relationships and functioning. Assessing ADHD within the home domain allows for a comprehensive understanding of the individual's behaviour in a more relaxed and informal context.

Simultaneously, NICE underscores the significance of evaluating ADHD behaviours within the work, school or educational setting. This involves examining the individual's performance, interactions with peers and teachers, and any challenges faced in academic and non-academic activities.

Assessing ADHD in both home school and work environments provides a holistic perspective, ensuring that the diagnosis and subsequent interventions are tailored to the individual's needs across different aspects of their life.

We will also ask that you provide in addition to documentation sent to you for completion, ask that two statements from others who have known the person being assessed for a significant period sets out how any of the following behaviours may be present in or impair the ADHD person's life.

- Inattentiveness
- Poor concentration
- Difficulty focussing
- Difficulty sitting still
- Blurting out
- Multiple job moves
- Interrupting conversation
- Difficulty with organisation
